Week 1

Read: 1 Samuel 16:6-13

Do you ever disqualify yourself? Or other people who you don't think are good enough for something?

Do you disqualify yourself from speaking up? Thinking new ideas? What about disqualifying yourself from certain friendships? Or taking opportunities? Or not volunteering or helping with something?

Me too. All the time, but God doesn't.

David wasn't the oldest, strongest, or bravest brother out of all of his brothers, in fact he was the youngest and the least experienced, but God choose him to be the King. God knows all of us inside and out. Because of that power and knowledge, we know that he is ultimately in charge of it all. He has a plan to use each of us to do big things if we just follow him. It can be daunting, and hard to believe but he is with us every step of the way.

There is wisdom that helps us logically reason with what to do and what not to do, but sometimes I find my own "wisdom" being infiltrated by the judgements and noise I have from my experiences. What God says is often different from my perception of what might be correct or best, and I often must keep myself in check about it.

How can you change your headspace around who is qualified and what God says?

Are there any ways you have disqualified yourself or others that you can seek God in?

What is the difference between wisdom and taking a risk? How do you choose when you have the option between the two?
